GEN. LOGAN DEAD.

The End Comes with Startling Suddenness to His Many Friends.

His Devoted Wife's Name the Last Syllable Uttered by the Famous Old Soldier.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—Senator Logan died at his home here a few minutes before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, surrounded by the members of his family and a great number of his political associates. Although the Senator had been sick for some time, and his condition for the past day or two was known to be critical, death was not looked for so soon. Every body hoped that with his robust constitution he would be able to recover.

His case was regarded as hopeful by his physicians up to Friday night, but then it became apparent that he was sinking very rapidly. From that time on rheumatic fever affected his brain and brought on frequent periods of stupor and unconsciousness. Saturday his condition remained unchanged, but it was deemed so critical in the evening that Dr. Hamilton, one of his attending physicians, remained at his residence over night. Early in the night he grew weaker, and his entire family, together with General Beale and Congressman Symes and Hall, remained by his bedside all night. At intervals during the night the Senator was conscious and seemed to rally. About midnight, during a conscious moment, his wife leaned over him and spoke to him. He murmured "Mary," and this was the last word that passed his lips, although he seemed to recognize some of those about his bedside as late as 5 o'clock in the morning. He sank gradually, and at three minutes before 3 in the afternoon died without a struggle.

The deathbed scene was painful and dramatic. General Phil Sheridan stood at the foot of the bed, with his hands clasped behind him, looking sternly and sorrowfully upon the face of his old comrade. Back of him was General Beale, Grant's most intimate friend. Mrs. Logan knelt at her husband's side, her face white and as near as possible to the color of her snowy hair. By her side were her two children—Manning, a splendid, swarthy boy, of a pure Spanish appearance, and Mrs. Tucker, his sister, a slim, dark-eyed brunette, tearless and pale, who watched alternately her mother and her dying father. Major Tucker, her husband, stood at the General's head. About the room were other groups from the callers below, who had tiptoed up to the room, which was partially darkened. It was feared that the General's death would be painful. His heavy breathing and occasional choking made every one fear a death from suffocation. At ten minutes after 3, amid the sound of weeping, the deep, sonorous voice of Dr. Newman was heard in prayer. As the deep voice of the pastor resounded through the great room General Logan died. Suddenly his painful breathing came quicker and in great pants. Then James, the colored servant, wished to lift him up. As he did so there was a choking rattle in the throat and a strong effort to clear it from the accumulation of mucus, but the effort was a failure. There was a stoppage of the breath, the eyes half opened, their pupils enlarged to the full size of the ball, and then the General fell back lifeless. Dr. Newman said solemnly: "He is gone."

Mrs. Logan became wild with grief. She fell upon the bed with her arm about her husband's body, crying, sobbing, wailing, calling out: "Oh, darling! Oh, darling!" Her abandonment to grief was even more sorrowful than the sight of the General's death. Mrs. Logan remained in this prostrate condition so long that it was felt necessary to call her to herself. With great difficulty she was torn away from the bed. It was plain that Mrs. Logan was in an excited mood from the intense excitement and great strain. Finally, when she was persuaded to leave the room, she turned and said, with determination: "You must promise that whatever you may find necessary to do that you shall not cut my poor darling's body. It was his wish, and it is mine that it shall not be done." Of course Mrs. Logan's wishes in this matter would have been law, but it was not the intention of the physician to hold a post-mortem.

About two weeks ago Senator Logan was first confined to his home with rheumatism, and, later on, this was followed by rheumatic fever, affecting his brain. The fever made terrible inroads upon the patient, and early last week he was so reduced in flesh that his friends would hardly have recognized him. His suffering up to within a day or two was intense. Senator Logan complained of agonizing rheumatic pains while he occupied his seat in the Senate the first two or three days of this session. His disease, which at first was acute inflammatory rheumatism, was not considered dangerous until rheumatic fever set in. Then his pulse ran so high and the fever became so intense at times that he sank into stupors.

There have been no arrangements perfected for the funeral. Mrs. Logan is so prostrated that she has been unable to listen to any suggestions as to the time or place of burial. To-night the idea seems to be that Gen. Logan should be buried in Washington. If Mrs. Logan has in any way given expression to her wishes she seems to prefer burial here. It is possible, however, that to-morrow it will appear preferable that Gen. Logan should be buried at Chicago, or at the old homestead in Jackson county, Ill., where the bodies of his father and mother rest. Nothing definite can be known until the family have had time to consult together quietly.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 29.—The decision that has been reached in regard to Gen. Logan's burial is practically this: After the funeral next Friday, the remains are to be interred in a Washington cemetery, to await a decision as to the place of final burial. One proposition made at Chicago is to send the southern end of the lake front for the grave; another is to erect a monument at the head of Grand boulevard and change the name of the thoroughfare to Logan. The casket was made at Oneida, New York, of Spanish red cedar, and covered with broadcloth. While it is clear that a liberal pension will be granted to Mrs. Logan, leading men throughout the country have already subscribed $12,000 for her relief. Senator Manderson will probably have the honor of occupying the vacant seat in the chamber.

Capt. G. E. Lemon has started a subscription fund for the benefit of Mrs. Logan with $1,000, and sent invitations to hundreds of Gen. Logan's friends and admirers throughout the country, asking them to contribute. The Western Union Telegraph company tendered the free use of its wires for transmitting subscriptions. The responses are now coming in rapidly, and $1,000 subscriptions have been received from Senator Sawyer, Hon. William Walter Phelps, John B. Drake of Chicago, Gov. Alger of Michigan, George M. Pullman, and others. The receipts in five hours from the time the subscription was started amounted to $100. All persons desiring to contribute should telegraph George E. Lemon, Citizens' National bank, Washington, D. C., stating the amount of their subscription, and send checks or drafts at once to the order of J. A. J. Creswell, president Citizens' National bank, Washington, D. C.
